Message from Dean, School of Law (HILSR)

(Editor-in-chief's Note)

The continuation of the HILSR Law Review with its second volume is a source of great satisfaction, reflecting the sustained commitment of the School of Law towards the advancement of rigorous scholarship and meaningful intellectual engagement. The journey from the inaugural volume to this second volume has been one of learning, growth and continued commitment to quality legal scholarship. The encouraging response received for the first volume, along with the enthusiasm and engagement of contributors, scholars and readers, has strengthened our resolve to continue fostering a platform that encourages diverse perspectives and rigorous engagement with contemporary legal issues.

Law cannot be understood in isolation from the social, political, economic and intellectual contexts within which it operates. Equally, legal scholarship must move beyond a mere description of what the law is and engage with the more difficult questions of what the law does, whom it serves and how it responds to changing social realities. The strength of an academic journal lies not simply in the number or variety of contributions it publishes, but in its ability to create a space for ideas to encounter one another.

I extend my sincere appreciation and congratulations to the Managing Editor and other Co-editors, student editorial team, reviewers and authors, who have contributed to the successful publication of Volume II of the HILSR Law Review. I wish the Review continued growth and success in its journey towards contributing meaningfully to the advancement of legal scholarship.

Prof. (Dr.) Saleena K. Basheer
